The Reason for Re-orders

What sells a book into tremendous figures in the way, for instance, the Tumulty story has started to sell? Well, varying reasons, perhaps. This time it is talk. The country is flooded with talk for and against Tumulty's book. People want it!

Joseph P. Tumulty

THE THOUSANDS who asked for Mr. Tumulty's revealment of Woodrow Wilson in book form—long before publication date—have increased daily. Hardly a magazine or newspaper you start to read nowadays fails to have something in its pages about Joseph P. Tumulty or Woodrow Wilson. Usually the comments concern the book. An astonishing percentage of the thousands reading the book are eager to express personal opinions about it. It's that kind of book, and it's therefore selling.

— a few of the challenging facts: —

He tells what Wilson said to him about the sinking of the Lusitania at the time it occurred.

He gives the President's soliloquy when they were alone together in the Cabinet room after the President had delivered his great war message to the Congress.

He explains how secret preparations for war were made by the President's order in 1916.

He tells how the "amazing indiscretions" of the Irish-American delegates prevented Wilson from aiding Ireland at the Peace Conference.

He tells why Wilson made his ill-fated tour for the League after his return from Paris.

He tells why Col. Harvey became his enemy instead of his Ambassador.

He tells of his physical collapse and how Lansing during his illness tried to have him superseded by Marshall.

Moulding Public Opinion

MANY papers have reprinted with comment the announcement that the Governor of Massachusetts has called upon all college and high school students in the state to follow the Armament Conference at Washington. In his proclamation he says:

"In the Armament Conference the political and economic history of the modern world is to be studied. All of us hope that the future political and economic history of the world may be given new direction as the result of it. I can conceive of no better way to train the citizens of tomorrow for the discharge of their most important duties than by encouraging their study of the proceedings of the great conference."

Such a proclamation again emphasizes what the book-trade has had every reason to be conscious of—that the moulding of public opinion and the preparation of the average American for competent judgment on international affairs is the most important work in the country today. That dispatches from correspondents cannot give the material for a fully-rounded and well-based opinion is as true today as it was two years ago, and if the public is to understand thoroly other countries and world problems, they must read books as well as periodicals and newspapers.

It is well that booksellers remind themselves occasionally that books are merchandise to be handled like merchandise, but it is even more important that they keep in mind that books are more than merchandise and the bookseller has a more important place in the community and in national growth than tradesmen in other fields. If the bookseller will walk to his front door and gaze either way to the next dozen stores, he can be reminded that, in spite of the fact that in times of war, food and clothing may be of the most immediate importance, in both war and peace, the moulding of public opinion and the keeping open of the channels for the expression of public opinion are of very first importance.

That we are in a period today when this fact is more pertinent than ever is unquestionable, and those booksellers who attempt by careful preparation and energetic work to measure up to their opportunities and responsibilities will be able to justify the opinion that a bookstore is a community center.

Give Books

THE peculiar place of books in a season of giving has been often stated and continually deserves restating until both the book-trade and the public are permanently conscious of the relation. It has been so well stated in the book supplement of the New York Herald that we reprint their editorial on another page and suggest that booksellers would do well to call this to the attention of the editor of their local paper who may find in it the suggestion for some special seasonal comment. This page might also be appropriately used in the store window or on the bulletin board.

Strike Benefits in Printing Offices

THE long continuance of strike conditions over the demand for a forty-four-hour week has a very direct bearing on the wage levels. Every union member at work is meeting a 10 per cent levy for the benefit of striking printers, or about $5 a week. Nearby, in Philadelphia, where the strike is still on, every striking compositor draws $20 a week from the national union, and beside this he is permitted to work at any other employment except composition while still drawing the $20. (Does not the appearance of these men in other jobs violate long standing union principles?) In spite of this strike, the composing rooms of Philadelphia are full of new men, and there seems to be no possible chance of the forty-four-hour week coming into effect.

It is a very pertinent question as to how long unions in one city can maintain needlessly high wage levels in order that those in another city can draw strike benefits to carry out an argument that has long since been lost. The strike for a forty-four-hour week has lost ground steadily, as all reports show, and, as the time lengthens out, the idleness in such places as Philadelphia becomes a charge of an enormous amount against the whole cost of printing. Ten thousand union men meeting an assessment of $5 a week create a fund of $2,500,000 a year for the national headquarters to use in fighting for the forty-four-hour week in other sections. While strike levies are a natural method in fighting for union ends, when the situation stretches out interminably, as this promises to do, one cannot help wondering who eventually meets this bill. It must be the consumer of printing, and he is becoming restless under the charge.

Educational Week

THIS has been Educational Week. Throughout the country platform and press have endeavored to bring new attention to the needs of the American educational system. We have probably been all too confident that everything is right and perfect in our educational organization, or, at least, that if we had not yet arrived at full efficiency we were at least well in the lead among nations.

The leaders in education in the country, however, feel very strongly that they need a more complete public backing to aid in the developments that are necessary.

Illiteracy figures brought out by the war statistics have helped to draw public attention to one aspect of the work; the special studies that have been made in the rural schools have pointed out another important line of work where growth is much needed. And over and above these special problems that must be taken up there is a great need of wider public earnestness in backing the educational leaders.

No group could be more interested than the book-trade in the progress of education. First, from what might be considered a selfish point of view, because an educated public is a book reading public. Also as citizens, because of their connection with educational movements they have a deeper sense than most people of how much this full support to new enterprise is needed. Both as citizens and as business men, the book-trade is a unit in its interest in Educational Week.

Tariff to the Front

THE new Congress will have the problem of tariff revision as its chief work, and the book-trade has a far more serious interest in the debate than it has had in any previous revision. This is because the Fordney Bill, as presented to the last session of Congress, had provisions that supplied a serious menace to the business.

The publishing industry of the country is not one that has sought added protection. For many years the duty on current books was 25%. The last tariff revision made the tariff 15%. The new one proposes 20%. In this particular the book schedule follows the general revision upward that would be expected from the protection plank of the Republican platform. The features of the bill that bring out sharp adverse comment are:

1. The withdrawal from the free list of books 20 years old.
2. The withdrawal from the free list of books in foreign languages.
3. The American Valuation plan.

The first change brings no protection to American industry, will keep many fine books out of the country and produce small revenue.

The second change gives no asked for protection to American industry, brings a decided hardship to our foreign born population, cuts our nation from a valuable contact with other nations whom we need to understand better, and will produce negligible revenue.

The third change is desired in the book-trade only by those who believe there is need to obtain adequate protection against German made toy books. This is a natural need and seems to be almost covered by Germany's 250% export duty on books and by the greatly deflated condition of the mark. The great bulk of our book importations are from Great Britain. An American Valuation system on rare or out-of-print books is an impossible situation (as it would also be on foreign language books) and on current books it would have the effect of tripling a twenty per cent duty on cost and would prevent many important books from appearing in the American market.

President Harding says of this feature of the tariff:

"There is manifest difference of opinion about the merits of American valuation. Many nations have adopted delivery valuation as the basis for collecting duties; that is, they take the cost of the imports delivered at the port of entry as the basis for levying duty. It is no radical departure in view of varying conditions and the disordered state of money values to provide for American valuation, but there cannot be ignored the danger of such a valuation, brought to the level of our own production costs, making our tariffs prohibitive. It might do so in many instances where imports ought to be encouraged. I believe Congress ought well consider the desirability of the only promising alternative, namely, a provision authorizing proclaimed American valuation, under prescribed conditions, on any given list of articles imported."

The Danger of a Copyright Impasse

THERE is serious danger of an impasse in the repeal of the manufacturing clause in our copyright code for the reason that the different interests involved take opposing views of certain incidental questions, especially that regarding importations.

The manufacturing clause, it will be recalled, was pressed by the printers and correlative unions and was opposed by most publishers at the time of its passage as an unjustifiable restriction. The printers, thru the International Typographical Union, have now consented to the repeal, but have coupled with that assent their desire for, tho not insistence upon, an increase of the tariff on books. The publishers, thru the American Publishers' Copyright League, now replaced by the Bureau of Copyright of the National Association of Book Publishers, have modified somewhat their original position, by coupling with their assent to the repeal the requirement that the permission of libraries and individuals to import, not for sale, an English copy of an English work without the assent of the American copyright proprietor, shall also be repealed. The authors, thru the Authors' League of America, which has practically taken over the work of the American (Authors') Copyright League, do not consider this requirement of the publishers a sine qua non and are not disposed to support this claim. The librarians, thru the American Library Association, will oppose stoutly the repeal of the exceptional permission given to libraries, and the learned societies are likely to join with the library organization in support of the permission to individuals to import copies for their own use and not for sale.

This conflict of interests has prevented the introduction of the measure as drafted, previous to the opening of the Disarmament Conference, as it was hoped to do, and unless some compromise can be adopted, it is likely to bar early action of any sort and postpone the question of the repeal of the manufacturing clause, pending the entire revision of the copyright code, which will be a matter of years. Such postponement is greatly to be deprecated.

The right to prohibit importation of any edition or copies of a work printed elsewhere, whether these copies be of the original English or foreign edition or not, is a direct corollary from the theory of copyright which gives the author or his representative, the publisher, the exclusive right to sell his product in any specified territory. This view is strongly supported in Droit d'Auteur of November 15th, doubtless on the authority of Professor Ernest Rothlisberger who is himself the best authority on international copyright and represents the interest of the author as creator of the work. Unfortunately, legal precedents in other countries are indefinite and confusing and do not support the view that prohibition of importations is in universal acceptance in other countries. The British copyright code of 1911 prohibits the importation of "copies made out of the United Kingdom of any work in which copyright subsists which if made in the United Kingdom would infringe copyright," and as to which the copyright proprietor gives notice to the Commissioners of Customs of his objection to such importation.

This phraseology is exactly copied into the pending Canadian act, passed by the Dominion Parliament and waiting the approval of the Governor General. This circumlocution in the new British copyright code has not yet, so far as has been ascertained, been interpreted by the courts. The previous British acts were interpreted in 1896 in the leading case of Pitts v. George. The Court of Appeal, two judges to one, held, speaking thru Justice Lindley, "that the complete exclusion given to the British proprietor by the act of 1842 'is most in accordance with legal principles and good sense.' It was further held that where the copyright had been divided, the words 'the proprietor of the copyright' indicate the owner of the English rights, and that if he had to 'submit to an unlimited importation of books lawfully printed in any part of Germany itself,' the British copyright 'would be absolutely worthless, and the beneficial object frustrated,' and protection by covenant with the original proprietor is by no means adequate." In this case copies of the original edition of a German musical composition had been imported for sale, and the question whether copies imported "not for sale or hire" was not passed upon. It seems never to have been judiciously decided, e.g., whether an American book, copyright in England and republished in England under such copyright, can or cannot be imported in the original American edition for library or individual use, as the often cited example of Tauchnitz' reprints of English books is 'essentially different. The new British code unhappily refers to the previous Customs acts under which "copyright is infringed by any person who 'imports for sale or hire any work . . . which to his knowledge infringes copyright'" and the uncertainty of the law in respect to copies imported for use and not for sale thus seems to be continued.

The new Canadian copyright act, after providing for the prohibition of importation of books copyrighted or licensed for publication in Canada, makes (Section 27), notwithstanding anything in this act, extraordinary exceptions, making it lawful for "any person."

(a) To import for his own use not more than two copies of any work published in any country adhering to the Convention;

(b) To import for governmental use any work wherever published;

(c) To import before a work is printed or made in Canada, for the use of any public library or institution of learning;

(d) To import any work published in the United Kingdom or in Convention countries for circulation among and sale to the public within either, provided that any Customs officer may require the importer to "establish his right to import"—the latter a provision which is an absolute puzzle when read in connection with the other features of the act.

The provisions of the British code in this, as in other respects, covers other British dominions in which there is not specific legislation. Until the pending Canadian act is approved, Canadian copyright depends upon the earlier acts, which previously prohibited importation, "except in the original edition from the United Kingdom," later limited by confining the exception to "two copies for libraries and one copy thru demand on the Canadian licensee by an individual for use and not for sale." The authorities as to the prohibition of importation in other countries are fully given in a statement from the Librarian of Congress made part of the printed record of the third hearing before the Patents Committees at Washington, March 26-28, 1908, which includes the text of the opinion in Pitt Pitts v. George as the leading English case.

The following, from Bowker's "Copyright, Its History and Its Law" (pp. 295-6), summarizes the status elsewhere than as cited above:

"The Australian code of 1905 prohibits the importation of all pirated books or artistic works in which copyright is subsisting in Australia, 'whether under this act or otherwise,' and provides for the forfeiture of such works, on condition of written notice by the owner of the copyright to the Minister, directly or thru the Commissioners of Customs of the United Kingdom, of the existence of the copyright and of its term. These provisions do not seem to make clear whether original editions of English works, of which an Australian edition is copyrighted, are held to be contraband."

"The legislation of France and Germany and other countries seems to provide against importation inferentially rather than specifically, Russia and Peru being exceptional in their specific prohibitions. But the treaties and conventions between the several countries are for the most part specific on this point, as are those of France providing that 'when the author of a work of which the property rights are guaranteed by the present treaty shall have assigned his right of publication or of reproduction to a publisher in the territory of either of the high contracting parties with the reservation that the copies or editions of this work thus published or reproduced cannot be sold in the other country, these copies or editions shall be considered and treated, respectively, in that country as illicit reproductions'; and the treaties of Germany are especially specific with respect to musical compositions."

The trend of international arrangements, as in the Berne and subsequent conventions, constituting the International Copyright Union, and the Pan-American copyright treaties is to permit such questions as those of importation to depend upon domestic legislation, and there seems no reason to fear that provisions of this sort in our own legislation would interfere with the admission of the United States to the International Copyright Union.

American publishers have good reason to hold that the right to control importation is an essential part of their purchase of an English book for the American market, even as against the original English edition, but the practical question is whether the opposition to the withdrawal of the importation privilege from libraries and individuals, for use and not for sale, would not meet with such opposition on the part of the library organization and of the learned societies in general as to postpone the repeal of the manufacturing clause for some years until the whole question of copyright revision can be thrashed out. It should be recognized that there are two sides to this question and that quite possibly our Supreme Court would divide on this question six to five, as the English Court of Appeal divided in the leading case cited above.

The contention on the other side should be frankly appreciated, especially as it coincides with the view of some of those highest as copyright authorities. This is that there should be no bar on the importation of the original edition, for use and not for sale, since the author and his original publisher are duly remunerated. An American buyer may honestly desire a copy of the original edition and the American publisher can, on the whole, be properly protected by his exclusive contract thru the author or original publisher and by making a reasonable price which would take away commercial reason for importation. In fact, this safeguarding of a fair price is a preventive of profiteering, which is much emphasized, altho its proponents are apt to overlook the conditions which make some prices somewhat different in any two competing countries.

It would seem that the way out of the dilemma, which would be a fair compromise, satisfactory to the several interests, may be found in a provision that prohibition would be operative only after notice had been filed by the proprietor of the American copyright with the Copyright Office, for use by the Customs authorities, that he requires such prohibition—a provision which would especially disarm the criticism that when no American edition was published there might be difficulty in making importation of a book which could not otherwise be had. Such provision that notice of prohibition should be filed by the publisher would result in registration, which would not prevent entrance into the International Copyright Union because it would not interfere with complete author rights, and would naturally lead to the publication by the Copyright Office, for the use of the Customs authorities, of a list which would practically safeguard all foreign works for which republication arrangements had been made by American publishers. This would go far to compensate for the waiver of registration and deposit as features of our present American copyright system.

The coupling with this provision of the privilege of importation by libraries and individuals for use and not for sale, provided the American publisher declined or neglected to furnish the original edition on demand, should remove the further objections raised on the part of these interests and make possible the prompt introduction and early passage of the bill for the repeal of the manufacturing clause, which is the one thing greatly to be desired to put our country in proper international relations and bring it thru the Berne Convention into the family of nations.

Reminiscences of a Book Scout

By Joseph Jewett Barton

I. An Unsolved Mystery

IN times past you may have read of G. D. S. and more lately of Dr. R. returning from Europe with a million dollars' or so worth of books acquired largely in the auction rooms; of course, they are the mighty hunters, like Nimrod of old, and quantity makes them great; but did, or do, they experience in these transactions the pleasure to be obtained by a gentleman about with an obscure Jew, or a second-hand furniture dealer, or a shrewish woman with an attic a hundred years old?

An old-time antique dealer of Staten Island once told me that when he kept a bookstore on Third Avenue in New York many years ago, G. D. S. used to come in, as you do, and paw over everything in the place and fight about paying more than fifty cents for any book in the shop, so evidently G. D. S. knew; about Dr. R.'s early history I know nothing except that he comes from a long line of bookseller ancestors. Let us compare these European trips like one to the fishing banks, and ours like angling in an unknown brook among sylvan shades; they to the shoals, the biggest purse wins, while we, by dextrous handling, land many sweet little fish and not infrequently hook in a darkened pool a prize, that if we were not case-hardened, would cause a gasp.

I.

A few years ago I was in Birmingham, Alabama, and it was not long before I ran into, as far as I know, the only old bookseller in town, and he was some character. In years past he had been a western prospector and miner, but thru the death of a relative had inherited a bookshop, and he didn't know exactly what to do with it, but he was keeping a stiff upper lip and bluffing along selling principally old school books, and trying to acquire some knowledge of his business. I got a little on Jack's soft side after a few visits when he found I had also been in the mining game and we had many an hour's chat on the vicissitudes of the hunt for the elusive ore, but when I turned the conversation to the bookstore stock, Jack ceased to be communicative. He was Irish but he was suspicious. Anyway, to show him I wasn't trying to do him out of his books, I bought of his school stock, which he was perfectly willing to sell, two copies of McGuffey's First Reader, three of the Second, and, to make an even half dozen, added a little French book entitled, "Le Ministre de Wakefield, Traduction Nouvelle, precede d'un essai la vie et les ecrits d'Oliver Goldsmith Par M. Hennequin," a neat little book 12mo. bound in blue figured cloth, with a leather label in black and gold (also issued in half cloth and boards) published by Bowen et Gray, Boston, 1831, a choice copy, probably brought into town by some Yankee invader; the town is full of Northerners in this Pittsburgh of the south. Jack thought a dollar and a half was about the right price for the six, and if he was satisfied, why shouldn't I have been?

I have always found it advisable when in a strange place, or up against an untried seller, to add to a single prize several other books of common interest, and "How much for the lot?" or "How much are these apiece?" is perhaps the best way to go at it.

Among those school books, and they were a fine old lot, I ought to have found the first edition of Peter Parley's Universal History in two volumes, Boston, 1837, but it was not to be; as a matter of fact, I have never found this work complete, tho I've had the first volume a long time; perhaps some day I'll find the second to match it.

On the south side of the store under the shelves was a row of boxes or bins covered with gunny sacks, and in my movements around I lifted the sacks one day, and found them filled with books, mostly quartos and folios, and had only time to note that they were bound in vellum and stamped with a coat of arms in gilt, when Jack suddenly turned around and curtly told me to leave them alone. "But, Jack," I asked, "can't I look at them?" "NO," he replied, "you can't; they are not for sale, and it's no use to look at them." And that is all the story except that blarneying, mine-talk and persuasion had absolutely no effect. He told me that he had bought them from an old plantation residence in the southern part of the state, as near as I could gather, around Mobile.

What he was going to do with them he wouldn't say, except that he thought they were good books and that the value wouldn't grow any less if he kept them for a time.

I explained that condition was everything in a book, and if they stayed in those bins long they would get dirty or damp and also the rats or mice or roaches would chew them up and very soon they wouldn't be worth a cent a pound, but it had no effect.

As a matter of fact, perhaps that is what became of them, because Jack was sure bull-headed. As this is a true story, except that Jack was not his name, it wouldn't do to surmise too loudly the history of those volumes, where Jack got them or how.

Dream your own dreams, as I have, night and day, dreams of loot, pirates, pillage, murder—there is no limit to this dream. Under the Spanish and French rule that part of the country housed many families of wealth from across the seas, and doubtless they brought with them or caused to be sent many books of now great value. I can shut my eyes and dream that I see the first edition of Champlain's voyages, quarto, innumerable Charlevoixs, Jesuit Relations and Books of Hours crawling out of those boxes. Sometime afterward I heard that Mr. Thomas Owen, then State Librarian of Alabama, had tried to see those books, and had met with no better luck than I, and also that he had declared that Jack, the old rip, with many asterisks after, ought to be shot at sight. Dr. Phillips of Birmingham, at that time Superintendent of Schools, was wont to explode at the very mention of Jack's name.

From a bibliophile's point of view, any crime is justifiable that takes from an unappreciative or wrong hands a literary treasure that should be in his, and to uphold this doctrine, if necessary, I could cite many an eminent authority in the collector's group. I had thoughts of sand-bagging Jack myself, or hiring footpads to put him in the hospital for a few weeks and then offer to run his store for him, or get a jimmy and break in some dark night, and other deeds of violence, but I lacked the courage of my convictions. Just at this point I got a hurry-up call to go to New Orleans, and in the press of other business, Birmingham for a time passed out of my mind; and when I was at liberty to go back to Jack's, I concluded it was probably too late. I don't know, perhaps under the gunny sacks still lie my Champlain and Book of Hours.

Our Importation Regulations on English Books

COMMENT on the present proposals for the revision of our copyright law appears in the November 15th issue of Le Droit D'Auteur, the official organ of the Union of Berne. The editor discusses the resolutions adopted by the American publishers at their meeting on October 4th as printed in full in the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY of October 8th, as follows:

"The condition under which the American publishers are agreeable to an abolition of the manufacturing clause is based on a reconsideration of Article 31 of the law of 1909, which allows the importation of copies of original European editions of works on which the publishers have the American rights, to libraries, societies and special individuals. When an American publisher becomes owner of the copyright thus obtained he does not in consequence possess an exclusive right to the home market. But importations can be made behind his back and against his wishes of copies of the European edition, thanks to the exceptions, referred to in the aforesaid resolutions by the publishers, which sap this right.

"Now, the American publishers who have been complaining for a long time of these importation privileges have no intention of asking that there be an absolute stop put to them, if anyone wants to own the overseas editions rather than theirs, but they realize that they should have control of this traffic and that it should pass thru their hands. In this they do not feel they are demanding anything unfair or unreasonable, since the English publishers having the rights to a work are invested with the exclusive right to that publication in their own territory and can also prevent the entrance into their country of foreign editions of the work, for instance, continental editions of Tauchnitz.

"The claim of the American publishers amounts to this, that they demand the effective exercise of 'the right of publication territorially shared.' We have suggested the same solution to the Canadian legislature in our comment on the new Canadian law, as the best means of safeguarding the Colonial edition against the importation of concurrent editions, and what would be just in this case must be conceded equally when it is a matter of the American publishers, namely, the supervision by them of their own market whenever they have obtained from the author the right to publish an edition from overseas.

"The American publishers claim, then, as compensation for the giving up of the manufacturing clause a provision of law to this effect: 'As long as there exists in the United States a copyright on a book, work of art, or a musical composition, its importation shall be forbidden unless it is done with the consent of the owner of the American copyright.'

"Both markets, the European (English) and American would thus be reserved to the owners of the respective rights."

Dr. Johnson's Book Shelves

CHRISTOPHER MORLEY reminds us of Dr. Johnson's measurements for his own bookcases, so that ardent Johnsonians may like to build their shelves on the same pattern. Here is the doctor's memorandum:

The lowest shelf one foot above the floor, and twelve inches broad.

The second shelf ten inches broad and eighteen inches above the lowest.

The third shelf ten inches broad and fifteen inches above the second.

The fourth shelf six inches broad and nine inches above the third, and so to the top, six inches broad at nine inches distance.

Book Exhibit Closes

AT the last authors' night of the "Books of the Year" exhibit at the National Arts Club, a battle royal was fought about Dos Passos' book, "The Three Soldiers." Those taking part in the discussion were:

John V. A. Weaver, author of "In American," Donald Ogden Stewart, author of "A Parody Outline of History;" John Bishop, editor of Vanity Fair; Henry Seidel Canby, editor of the Evening Post Literary Review; John Farrar, editor of The Bookman, and James Gould. A collection of original sketches made by Don Passos in New York, France and Spain, gave color and vigor to the discussion.

The "Books of the Year" Exhibition has closed, to make room for a "Humorists' Exhibition," including every kind of humorous art, sculpture, painting, drawing, cartoons, etchings, lithographs, toys and handicrafts, which will occupy the galleries of the National Arts Club, from December 7th to 31st.

Printing Quadricentennial

THE 400th anniversary of the Cambridge University Press was celebrated on Thursday the 10th inst., by a dinner given in the hall of Corpus Christi College by the Vice-Chancellor of the University and the Syndics of the Press and attended by a distinguished gathering of printers, publishers and literary men. Notable among the visitors were representatives of the Clarendon Press, headed by Dr. Farnell, Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford.

The Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge presided, and the company included: Sir Frederick Macmillan, Mr. C. R. Rivington (Master of the Stationers' Company), Dr. James MacLehose (Glasgow University Press and president of the Master Printers' Federation), Mr. Geoffrey Williams (president of the Publishers' Association), Mr. H. W. Keay (president of the Booksellers' Association), Mr. W. R. Codling (Controller of H. M. Stationery Office), and Mr. S. C. Roberts (author of the history of the Cambridge University Press.)

Sir Frederick Macmillan, in a speech, mentioned that he first learned the art of typesetting at the Cambridge University Press, and at length achieved the glory of being able to set up an examination paper in Greek with all the accents complete. His experience at Cambridge gave him a taste for beautiful printing, and he acknowledged the service the Cambridge University Press had rendered to the art of printing.

THE heads of the photo engraving industry in New York, organized as the Photo Engraving Board of Trade, have offered a 1922 contract to the Photo Engravers' Union Number 1 with the suggestion of a forty-eight instead of a forty-four hour week. The managers claim that under present conditions they cannot compete with non-union shops in the city or even unionized shops outside of the city, where the forty-eight hour week prevails and wages are lower than the New York fifty dollar minimum.

The Board of Trade claim that the industry in New York is at present only about sixty per-cent normal, probably over one hundred skilled engravers being out of work and many concerns running at a loss. They also point out that if advertising firms do their engraving out of town, they are likely to do their printing out of town and thus increase the difficulty in shops in New York. The Board of Trade states that they believe an acceptance of the forty-eight hour unit will prevent the acceleration of the open shop movement here.

The union met at once and promptly rejected any suggestion of the abolishment of the now established 44-hour schedule. The two sides must now meet and make some compromises or start arbitration.

Masterpieces of Bookmaking

THE exhibition now being held at the Grolier Club in Sixtieth Street, New York, is one that should be missed by no one who can go there between now and the time of the exhibit's closing the end of December. The members of this famous Club have loaned from their collections examples of illustrated books from earliest times to present day, and rare opportunity to study illustrated books is given, as such a collection could only be made thru the co-operation of many owners. The exhibit might almost be said to serve as a test of one's taste in book-making. Such a book, for instance, as "Hypnerotomachia" of Francesco Columna, printed by Aldus in 1499, a book so beautiful in its general combination of type, illustration and page layout that its fame needs no explanation. Such a book is "Horae in Laudem Beatiss." printed by Tory in 1531. One can see from the pages that Tory had to work with handicaps that no modern printer has to face, and yet he produced a total result that makes that book one of the masterpieces of the printing art. There is a copy of the first book of which the illustrator's name is known. It was printed at Mainz in 1486. This is lying beside an exquisite edition of Aesop, printed at Naples in 1485.

Probably the student of illustrating would turn with especial interest to the fine copy that is shown of what has been called the most important single set of illustrations ever made, Holbein's illustrations for "The Dance of Death," printed at Lyons in 1538. Durer's drawings are well represented, one of the most magnificent being "Epitome in Divae Parthenices Mariae," printed at Nuremberg in 1511. Drawings from this book furnished the three beautiful cuts which the Century Magazine reprinted in their Christmas number. There are specimens of the wonderful work of Bernard Salomon, greatest of Lyonesse printers.

When one turns from the earliest masters to the later centuries, names become varied and of wide appeal. There are exquisite copies of the works of the great French illustrators of the eighteenth century whose masterpieces were printed from copper, Eisen, Moreau and others. Bewick is represented and Stothard and Thurston and Daumier where we first see abandon and a sense of humor appearing, and Dore and Dalziel and Millais each represented by but one or two specimens but by the very best of these. The series appropriately ends with the great Kelmscott Chaucer with the beautiful Burne Jones drawings.

Poetry Society Prize

THE Poetry Society of America announces that the prize of $500 offered in the William Lindsey Contest for poetic drama has been awarded to Mr. Harry Lee for his four-act play, "Il Poverello." One hundred forty-five plays were submitted in the contest. The judges were George Arliss, George P. Baker, Clayton Hamilton (resigned, and replaced by Jane Dransfield), Jessie B. Rittenhouse, and Stuart Walker.

Price Maintenance Suit

FOR several months those interested in the discussion of price maintenance have been watching for the decision in the case of the Federal Trade Commission against the Beechnut Packing Company, and it is disappointing to find that the case is still further postponed. When this case came before the Supreme Court, the statement of facts expressly said that the merchandising policy of the Company "does not constitute a contract or contracts whereby resale prices are fixed, maintained or enforced." In this way it was hoped to get a clear cut decision as to whether the independent refusal by a manufacturer to sell to dealers who do not charge the prices suggested by him or resell to other dealers who do not charge such prices constitutes an unfair method of competition in the meaning of the law. Unfortunately, the Government has withdrawn its agreement to this statement of facts and contends that, while there is no contract, there is nevertheless "tacit understanding." This means that clear cut decisions are still further put into the future and makes it the more important to obtain remedy along the lines of the Stephens-Kelly Bill.

Give a Book a Week

AN appropriate last act to a year's emphasis on Buy A Book A Week is reported by E. P. Dutton's retail book department this month. A salesman took an order from a gentleman, who has directed him to write to a friend stating that E. P. Dutton's retail department had been instructed to send a book a week for the entire year, to carry a full season's good wishes. Many bookstores around the country have been reporting that people took very seriously the idea of a book a week, but perhaps this is the first case in which it has been the basis of a gift.

Novelties in Advertising

THE year has brought many new experiments in the way of book publicity, and it is rather interesting to notice the comment on these in so dignified a book medium as the Boston Transcript, in which the editor, after noticing that Appleton had sent out phonograph records of Wright's own readings, goes on to say:

"This appeal to the ear is buttressed by the visual stimulus in the form of stereopticon slides prepared for teachers, ministers and lecturers. These are new artifices in propaganda for book-buying. Appleton's apparently are working on the principle that they must compete with the movies, the World Series and the Carpentier-Dempsey fight if they wish to catch America's attention. In the particular case mentioned they may be going to the extreme—but publishers who retain the mysterious solemnities and the repelling combination of dignity and monotony in their appearances before the public are also going to the extreme. . . . And they are frightening their readers—or customers—away."

In the Gift of a Great Book You Conspire With Genius

“WHAT shall I give my friend for Christmas?”
“Do you mean friend, or is it only somebody you happen to know?”
“Friend!”

“Well, nothing is too good, in that case. Give a skyscraper or one of the Thousand Islands or a Russian wolfhound or a grand piano or a grain of radium.”

And with all the rest, books.

Or if you can't give anything else, give books. For in them is the magic that commands all the treasures of the universe.

Books draw the stars from the sky and the pearls from the deep.

Before wireless telegraphy was ever dreamed of books carried the greatest messages of mankind around the world and across the centuries.

Books anticipate all discoveries and keep the precious past from the hands of thieving Time.

Moving pictures of ancient civilization flash upon the silver screen of the reader's mind. We cannot go back and make phonograph records of dead singers, but in the old poets the rhythms of long ago sing to the inner ear.

All the arts and all the sciences transmit their treasures in print. So each new generation finds the stored material for a continual recreation of the world.

Roosevelt once told a friend that he could remember the look of the page in one of Stanley's volumes that kindled his faith and fixed his will to be the man he finally became. It was in reading Spenser that Keats first knew himself a poet. But even a poor stick of a book may feed the divine fire. Lincoln felt the heart of American history beat in him as he read Weems's Washington. The world laughs at Parson Weems now.

But the world does not laugh at Lincoln.

He who gives a book touches the springs of life, plays upon the keys of an organ whose notes will sound perhaps in other lands and in other centuries.

The giver of books may be a conspirator with genius. Next to the great writer is the one who finds for him the right reader.

Books carry the seed of life. Scatter them widely in the hope of harvest. Plant them one by one in the most fertile soil you can find.

Books are at once the most exquisitely intimate and the most broadly universal means of expression. In them is restoration and repose. In them is the irresistible call to go on.

There are plenty of good books and there will be more. What the world needs is better use of them.

Business men declare that invention and production have outrun effective merchandising, that is, bringing the right thing to the right person. In no field is this so true as in literature.

The mass of people know by hearsay that there are such things as books.

In a population of 105,000,000 a sale of 10,000 copies is called good, 100,000 is amazing. Not the sale but the situation is amazing.

Part of it is the fault of authors, publishers and booksellers. But the greater lack is in the reader or in him who might be a reader, or in him who might create a reader by a well chosen gift.

Libraries are good, but what we need is more individual ownership and use of books—not as so much paper and ink and binding, but as means of life.

Books are food to eat, books are air to breathe, light for the eyes, a path for the feet and a hand to clasp in the dark.

Give books!

BULWER-LYTTON'S "Not So Bad As We Seem" was recently acted in London for the benefit of the children's libraries. King George and Princess Mary were in the audience. The play was written in 1851, and when it was first produced, Charles Dickens took part and Queen Victoria attended. The distinguished cast which acted in the present revival included: Rebecca West, Margot Asquith, Iris Tree, daughter of Sir Herbert Tree, W. L. George, Sir Gilbert Parker, Alfred Noyes, and W. Pett Ridge.

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN has announced an impressive advertising campaign for "Sister Sue," which is to be featured as a Christmas book. The campaign commenced the last week in November, and employs fifteen religious papers, the Outlook, and thirty-eight newspapers. It is estimated that this advertising will reach 15,000,000 readers. The religious papers to be used are: Western Christian Advocate, North Western Christian Advocate, Central Christian Advocate, California Christian Advocate, Pacific Christian Advocate, Epworth Herald, Zion Herald, Christian Endeavor World, Sunday School Times, Watchman Examiner, Continent, Congregationalist, Christian Register, Record of Christian Work, Presbyterian.

A UNIQUE and interesting paper novelty has been issued by the Køch-Danish Novelty Corporation, gay-colored paper birds and animals which if folded, cut and glued in the proper fashion make plump and perfect figures which can be used as toys, or candy containers or Christmas tree ornaments.

Two kindred spirits have met in book production, Thomas Fogarty, illustrating the selected poems of Christopher Morley now published by Doran under the title "Chimney-smoke." It contains the best loved verse from three previous volumes with two-score drawings.

AN interesting bit of news for those who are planning travel south is that the new 1922 Automobile Blue Book is now ready. Two 1921 volumes, Vol. 3 and Vol. 6 are made into one for 1922. It takes in everything from New York, south to Florida and Louisiana.

"SPENDING the Family Income" because it teaches how not to spend the family income is a book which will command a large audience. It is by S. Agnes Donham, and published by Little Brown. The book has many interesting charts, including some color charts; and there are budgets of time and money for the housekeeper, chapters on standards of shelter, food, clothing, the child's income, and the student's income, etc.

STEPHEN MCKENNA, in his preface to his book of memoirs in defense of a volume of memories by a young man, quotes his friend, Shane Leslie, author of that delightful volume of reminiscence, "The End of a Chapter"—those "who are old enough to write memoirs are usually too old to remember." Mr. McKenna continues "My reason for writing this book is that I wish to record certain impressions of a vanished generation while I remember them clearly and sympathetically; my excuse for publishing it is that the opinions and recollections of middle life are so seldom articulate."

The property will be operated as heretofore both from New York and Chicago, the printing, mechanical work and distribution being handled in Chicago.

C. G. Sinsabaugh has been appointed general manager of Motor Life by the new owner of that property. Prior to becoming associated with Motor Age in 1905, he was connected with daily newspapers in Chicago. Postal Progress

THE most recent report on postal problems discussed among other things, the importance of the prompt delivery of newspapers, which the postal workers and the newspapers themselves are going to study to expedite. Special delivery mail service is to be further developed. Altho the public pays only for the special delivery, it expects and should have, the report says, the "special delivery" mail given special consideration in transit.

One of the permanent results of the recent postal congress is the adoption of the domestic postal rates in the United States to the South American countries which will go into effect just as soon as the agreements are ratified in the South American countries. This congress also effected consolidation of a great many charges on parcels post. This will facilitate dispatch of parcels to South American countries.

The post office department is to undertake the cost keeping of the parcel post to ascertain whether this service is being conducted at a profit or loss. It is a service to the public but it is also a commercial transaction and should pay its way. The cost of carrying parcel post and all other classes of mail must be ascertained before intelligent changes if any can be made in the postage rates.

The Meryon Memorial Exhibition in the Print Gallery of the New York Public Library, intended to be on view during November only, will be continued until the end of the year.

The sixth annual exhibition of the Brooklyn Society of Etchers was opened to the public in the print galleries of the Brooklyn Museum December 6 and will continue until January 2. Two hundred and sixty-nine prints are being shown.

A "Catalogue of Famous Books" comprising first editions in the original bindings for the collector and also including fine imported sets, many in choice leather bindings, just issued by Ernest Dressel North, 4 East Thirty-ninth Street, should not be overlooked by the discriminating book buyer.

The "Collected Poems" by Edwin Arlington Robinson, in two volumes, limited to 200 copies, the first volume signed by the poet, with his portrait in silver point as frontispiece, issued by the Brick Row Book Shop, is proving popular among collectors, the entire edition having been nearly exhausted.

"The business of making de luxe rarities out of every scrap of writing by famous authors has been carried much too far" says Christopher Morley in "The Literary Lobby." Booksellers are still asking fancy prices for these artificial rarities and seem to be selling them. the fashion will doubtless continue as long as collectors continue to buy.

The famous Dickens collection gathered by Dr. R. T. Jupp, one of the most famous of the great novelist in England, will be sold at the Anderson Galleries February 5 and 6 of next year. In addition to an unrivalled collection of first editions there is a large number of autograph letters by and relating to Dickens.

The Print Makers Society of California announces its third international exhibition to be held in the Gallery of Fine and Applied Art in the Los Angeles Museum from March 30 to April 17 of next year. The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce offers a gold medal for the best print in the exhibition and there are several prizes.

The library of William M. McBean of Yonkers, N. Y., and a fine collection of costume and colored plate books consigned by the estate of Bertha S. Fiero, of this city, with additions, will be sold at the Anderson Galleries December 13 and 14. This sale contains many choice library books with a sprinkling of rarities, mainly of the last century, all in choice condition.

The Modern Humanities Research Association, a body formed in England in 1918, for encouraging 'advanced study in modern languages and literature' has issued a "Bibliography of English Language and Literature" comprising pertinent articles published in the year 1920 in the British Isles, Australia, Canada, United States, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, India, Italy, Portugal, Roumania, Serbia, Spain, Sweden, and Switzerland.

The Walpole family documents, the property of Sir Wathan Waller, comprising an extensive series of autograph letters from Horace Walpole to prominent men, his journal of the printing office at Strawberry Hill 1757-89, common-place books, journals of travel, important letters addressed to Horace Walpole including 108 of the poet Gray covering the period 1734-70, were sold at Sotheby's in London, December 4.

The Kate Greenaway collection of Miss M. I. Meacham, of this city, long known as the finest in this country, will be sold at the Anderson Galleries December 12. It includes illustrated books, seasonal cards, original drawings, a great variety of her almanacs, the excessively rare "Album" limited to eight copies and the first to appear in the auction room, autograph letters and practically everything that has been written about this popular illustrator either in magazines or book form.

There is apparently much interest just now in illustrated books of all periods. Catalogs now arriving from English rare book dealers contain many lots of this character. The current catalog of James Tregaskis (Caxton Head Book-Shop) London, specializes on "rare illustrated books of the sixteenth century to which is added a collection of separate wood cuts, engravings and etchings of the same period." Like all catalogs from this famous book shop this issue is of special interest to discriminating collectors.

An extraordinary collection of historical documents and autograph letters embracing the Andrew Jackson papers relating to the War of 1812, the Calhoun controversy, the Seminole War, and the Bank of the United States; the Robert Fulton papers relating to the submarine torpedo; the General Lafayette papers relating to the Revolutionary War; the Samuel F. B. Morse papers relating to the telegraph; fine letters of many of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence; generals of the Revolution including important letters of General Washington, will be sold by Stan. V. Henkels in Philadelphia December 13.

The private papers of John P. Hale, first anti-slavery senator in Congress and of Frederick Myron Colby with extra-illustrated books from the library of the late Tennis V. Holbrow, consigned by George H. Sargent, of Boston, will be sold at the Anderson Galleries December 19 and 20. Most of the Hale books bear his autograph or that of members of the family and many are presentation copies. They have an association value as having belonged to one of the earliest advocates of negro freedom and thru whose persistent efforts flogging was abolished in the Navy.

London and New York are not having all of the important sales this season. Reports from the great cities of the Continent indicate a lively interest in rare books and in some cases very high prices. The sale of the von Bode library in Berlin was very successful. The Wasserman collection, rich in manuscripts, early printed and illustrated books, fine and rare bindings, and valuable old works in miscellaneous literature, sold in October and November, in Brussels, also brought very satisfactory prices. Similar reports come from Paris. It is not going to be as easy to strip Europe of her literary rarities as it was imagined two or three years ago.

Rare books from the libraries of the Duke of Kent, Earl de Grey, Thomas Foley, Lord Foley, with additions, were sold at the Anderson Galleries November 30 and December 1, 493 lots bringing $9,753.75. Announcement

THERE has never been a time when there has been a greater need for prompt and accurate credit information. Fully realizing its responsibility to the Trade, The Typo Mercantile Agency announces a complete re-organization of its business and the election of the following officers:

W. T. G. WEYMOUTH,	President
GEORGE P. NORTHROP,	Vice-President
BELDEN SEYMOUR DAY,	Vice-President
THOMAS P. LONGMORE,	Treasurer
GEORGE R. RICE, JR.,	Secretary

Mr. Northrop and Mr. Longmore, who are again associating themselves with this organization are too well known to need any introduction.

They are old Typo men, imbued with the Typo Spirit to which has been added a broader knowledge of the needs of the Trade during the years they were away from us.

The present Typo Reporting Staff has also been augmented by the addition of Mr. E. Schalk and Mr. Frank J. Roscoe who have been in close touch with credit conditions in this line for several years and are well known to Credit Managers.

We confidently believe that we are better equipped than any one else to give the Service to which this great industry is entitled and we would be pleased to have the opportunity of demonstrating this to those houses who are not now subscribers to the Typo Service.
